WRITER CONTENDS CHINA MUST MAKE
FINAL DECISIONS ON FAR EASTERN QUESTIONS

An article entitled "What is the New China's Foreign Policy and Position in World Politics?" by Ssu Mo (1) /number in parentheses refers to appended characters/ states that China's foreign policy is based on the Sino-Soviet Treaty. The writer contends that no Far Eastern questions can be decided without the final approval of China, as follows:

Let us talk about the new China's relationship with Asian problems and attitudes toward problems in the Far East. The new China does not merely want to unite with and support the oppressed peoples in the Far East in their struggle for equality and independence, but also has the right to participate in discussions and to make final decisions on all Far Eastern problems directly concerned with China. No decision concerning Far Eastern problems, directly concerned with China, such as the Korean, Japanese, Vietnamese, etc., problems, is valid or legal without China's participation. In fact, such problems are incapable of solution without China. In regard to this matter, the British Labor publication, The New Statesman and Nation admits that without China's good will, no Far Eastern questions can be solved.

Whoever attempts to blot out China's voice in Far Eastern affairs, will surely be put to shame. Foreign Minister Chou En-lai gave the following warning to American imperialists during the celebration of National Day in 1950:

"Whoever wants to blot out and destroy the welfare of one fourth of the world's population and vainly hopes to decide arbitrarily any Far Eastern question directly concerned with China, will certainly bump his head until the blood flows." This emphasis on new China's right to a voice in Far Eastern questions may be said to be one of the distinguishing characteristics of China's foreign policy.
